

Partnership and outreach programs help develop community coalitions to assist in planning, evaluation and funding for acquisition and stewardship actions. Partners include students and schools, watershed councils, urban forestry advocates, sportsmen groups, private natural science consultants, and other conservation and wildlife organizations at state and federal levels. Most acquisitions and easement agreements involve partnerships that are specific to that individual project. For example, the Gateway to Discovery Natural History Center is a joint venture between the NCLC and Seaside's Native American Project (SNAP), Clatsop-Nehalem Confederated Tribes, Seaside Museum and Historical Society, and the Watershed-Estuary-Beach
